The purposes of this thesis are to study ethnic identity of Mons and the factors that caused the cultural changes of Mons in Chedeethong Village, Tambol Klongkwai, Amphoe Samkok, Pathumthane Province.

This study mostly applies an anthropological techniques to collect the data ,such as participant observation , key informant interviews , questionnaire and relevant document collection in order to aggregate and analyze conceptual framework of this thesis.

The results of this study shows that the Mons at Chedeethong village have been assimilated to Thai society steadily. There are many factors that cause the change of cultural identity of Mons in this area. Education reformation is one of these factors, because it reduces Mons language usage in this village. Another factor is modernization , which led to the change of Mons life style. However, religion has slightly changed due to the existence of the important pagoda respected by Mons at Chedeethong village and the other surrounding areas, coupled with the strong religious faith of village leaders
