A plane flies over the forest. Now someone opens the door of the plane. Some big, white parachutes come out. On the end of all the parachutes is a box. In the boxes are beavers.

Soon the boxes will be on the ground and they will open. Then the beavers will run into the forest and find a river. They will begin to build a dam.

A dam is a big pile of trees in a river. It stops the water in the river. Only some water goes through the pile of trees. Behind the dam there will be a big pond. The pond helps to keep the forest green and wet. A fire cannot start in green, wet forests.

A beaver is an animal that works harder than other animals. Beavers can build dams hundreds of meters long and more than three meters high. Beavers use their strong teeth and little hands to cut down trees for a dam. When the tree falls, the little worker takes the tree into the river where he wants it.

Why do beavers work so hard to make a dam and a pond? Because they want houses with water all around them. The dam is the beavers' house. Beavers' houses are like little islands and are very safe. The beavers' home of nut and wood is warm when the cold weather come. For food they eat small pieces of wood.

The beaver works hard and asks for very little. All they want is a place to build a dam and live quietly.
