This research is conducted to understand the Thai cabin crews about how their current living conditions are and what they expect about housing in the future. In order to understand such questions, the research studies various factors from former and current living conditions personalities and work expectations about housing. To be able to understand these factors clearly, the population of Thai cabin crews and divided into three groups which are group of age between 20-29 years, 30-39 years, and 40 years up to the retirement age. This classification by age is made to understand each particular group's characteristics in more depth so that the ultimate goals are reasonably explained.

The result from the study reveals that, the living styles of males and females aged between 20-29 years are influenced by colleagues and work experiences. Moreover they often consult with their parents about housing as most of them are single and preparing to buy themselves residence unit(S). Single house is mostly targeted in both recent and future as it is appropriated to their works following by condominium. Their financial or spending habits are in forms of each and credit cards payments. They agree traffic congestion is their serious problems in their life.

Males and females aged between 30-39 years, nevertheless, give the important role to the (living) taste gained from higher work experiences. Family members play the major role of consulting, financing, and coordinating with serious responsibilities as single house is chosen as similar to those mentioned groups. The rest factors are the same.

For the group aged 40 years and above, there is a big difference between males and females which is, both (living) taste gained from high work experiences and colleagues do influence males but not females. Apart from this difference, single house is most wanted in both current and future spending habits and their thought of traffic congestion are the same as mentioned in the groups above.
