ABSTRACT

The purposes of this investigation were to study work performance concerning school plant and personnel administration of the reformed primary school.

A set of questionnaires was constructed to collect data from 509 subjects including heads and vice heads of the district primary education offices, educational supervisors, and the primary school administrators and teachers.

A computer program was applied to analyzed the obtained data. The earned statistics were percentage, arithmetic mean, and standard deviation.

The investigation revealed that school plants and personnel administration of the reformed primary schools were performed at the "most" level.

The respondents' suggestions for improving the reformed primary schools were as follows :

- 1) There should be adequate provision for drinking water containers.
- 2) Adequate laboratories should be provided.
- 3) Cooperation among teachers, students, and school keepers on school development should be concerned
- 4) In order to develop work efficiency, the should be facilitating personnel training and advance study.
