The primary objective of this study is the identification of behavior and attitude of the community's member actors towards the Siam Square Communal police station, and organization intended to distribute relevant values to the members and the people-at-large.

Considered as a political innovation, the communal police station should generate certain reaction, cooperation and participation.

However, the findings are as follows: low level of collective consciousness prevails among the general community, residents; participation in collective activities are, accordingly, limited. Notwithstanding a relatively high level of collective consciousness do exist among entrepreneurs doing business in the community regardless of their limited participation, positive attitude of general population living in the community towards the merit of such political innovation.

Consequently, this research does confirm the Fact that the existence of community's actors' collective consciousness is in dispensable if the political-administrative innovation (a community police station) of this kind is to be successful.
