The purposes of this research are twofold : firstly, to study the development of illegal foreign labors control policy and secondly, to study the social impact of illegal foreign labors control policy, especially on the epidemic control of infection diseases including the safety of people's lives and properties.

It is found in this study that the illegal foreign labors control policy is effective in some part and there are impacts on epidemic control of infection diseases, but the costs of health services in Thailand are higher. Moreover, the problems of the safety of Thai people's lives and properties cannot be solved because the policy is not clear enough.
