ABSTRACT

The purposes of this investigation were to study the existing conditions on instructional management with regards to educational reform. The sample was comprised of 972 subjects including secondary school administrators, teachers and students. A set of questionnaires was constructed to gather data. The obtained data were analyzed by a computer program. The earned statistics were percentage, arithmetic mean, and standard deviation.

The secondary schools performed instructional management in order to reform their schools at the "much" level, especially on encouraging boy scouts and girl guides to conduct moral development. The significant problems were development on innovation and technology educational.
