ABSTRACT

The purposes of this investigation were to study the existing performance, problems, and needs of investigation of traffic case. The sample was comprised of 99 investigating officials. The subjects were the total population. A set of questionnaires was developed to collect data. The earned data were then analyzed by using a computer program to calculate arithmetic mean, and standard deviation.

The findings:

The respondents perceived that the investigating officials moderately applied their knowledge and cumulative experience, associates'support, and police science to conduct their investigation. Whereas they least received people's support and organizational training for their performance. The problems of the investigating officials concerning associates' supports, people's assistance, using police science and organizational training were at the "moderate" level. Their significant needs were administrative resources and organizational morale faliciating concerning continuousty promoting "Distinguished Investigating Officials Project", and training program at least once a year.
