From the time of change on the admintration system in 1932,Thailand has been governed under Paliamentary system,by The National Assembly using the legislative power,with major role playing in enactment of laws.

This thesis aims to study the role of Thai Parliament in the making of laws,through making analysis on the procedure in making presentation,give consideration;in the period between 1964 to 1973,since the demise of The Field Marshal Sarit Thanarajt, to The 14 October 1973 Incident.

This study found that ,between 1964 to 1973 ,under the development process on politics,economics,and social,and also the international political situation,the state admintrative mechanism had been highly powerful in the legislation procedure,both structure and the decision making process was controlled by the administrative party,As the Parliament was constituted by members who were appointed by the administrative body; and even at the time when Parliament member had come from election,the administrative party was still have power through its determination for the Senators who come from appointment,and be authorized with equal power to the Parliamentary member and inclusively of the weakness of the political parties,and the interest groups,resulting in the laws as enacted being virtually and totally proposed by the government,in using the Parliament as only the checker; and most of the laws were enacted to facilitate and to be responding to the needs of the government policy,more than to be used as remedial action against the social problems;and inclusively in the lack of protective measures for the liberty of the general population.

And in addition,from the good relation with The United States Of America, and the acceptance of aids therefrom,who came and gave support to Thailand in epectation for cooperation in anti-communism actions,resulting the rapid changing of the economic status;and there were a large number of laws for the general development of the country in line with the objectivity as outlined by the United States Of America as mentioned before.

Anyhow, the study will make known to us the behavioural activities, and roles of the Parliament in the past; and inclusively of the laws that were enacted in that period of time,and that has made known to us the defect as involved,which , if there would have been remedial actions done, The Parliament would have been serving as a very efficient legislature institution, while representing with efficiency the people of the country.
