The objective of this thesis is to identify the role and hierarchy of urban communities in Chachoengsao Province which related to the Eastern Seaboard Development Project as well as the relationship of urban development and their communities systems. The five sector variables are considered in the factor analysis : physical , population , economic, the transportation and social services features. Potential analysis of spatial were determined which made a result in the hierarchies and the important role in the communities.

The result of the thesis shows that Muang Chachoengsao Municipality, Bang Khla Municipality are the first hierarchy ; Phanom Sarakham Sanitary District is the second hierarchy. Those three communities play the role in commerce and economic services. Bang Hua, Bang Pakong, Tha Kham Sanitary Districts and Plaeng Yao Sanitary District have a role in industry while Bang Nam Prieo Sanitary District is the center for agriculture. Urban communities in the Chachoengsao Province related and shared in their economic by their transportation network system which connect all communities in the Eastern Seaboard Development Project area.

The guideline of this development is to identify their role by synchronization and dependency in their physical and economic features which can respond to the government's Eastern Seaboard Development Project.
