This is a study of expectation of the people toward the role of the members of the House of Representatives in electoral districts number 2, 10 and 11 of Bangkok which are electoral districts used in 2 July 1995 general elections. The sample size is 200 persons per district, thus 600 persons in all. Career and education are two variables used in the study.

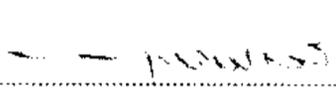

It is found out that only career affects the attitude of the people on the expected and actual roles of the MPs. It is also found out that people have higher expectation on the role of the MPs than that prescribed by law.
