The objective of this research is to identify the political awareness and political participation of The Government Savings Bank personnel as public enterprise employees, and the relationships among political awareness, political participation and the working efficiency.

Through the survey research method, the data are collected from samples of 357 employees from 37 branches under the coverage of the Bank's "Piem namjai" project. It is discovered that generally The Government Savings Bank personnel have a high rate of political awareness, but a low one of political participation. Moreover, the political awareness and political participation have no significant relationships with the working efficiency.

The result of this study indicates that the pattern of political participation found in most of the employees tends to be a mobilized one, like that in majority of common citizens. Politics is not their ways of life. It is separated from their working lives.
