The purposes of this study were to develop an art education textbook on art appreciation for Prathom Suksa five students and to compare the achievement scores between two teaching methods : teaching by using textbook and teaching by general method.

The samples of the population used in this study included sixty Prathom Suksa five students at Banlaemthong School in Petchaburi Province during the academic year of 1993, the six educational experts and nine elementary teachers.

The process of this study consisted of developing a textbook concerning the quality and efficiency. The framework in developing the textbook covered four aspects 1) the art developmental stage, 2) the elementary art curriculum, 3) the principles of art criticism and 4) the principles of textbook design. The education experts, teachers and students then examined the textbook. Further, the textbook was tested for efficiency by $E_1/E_2 = 80/80$ concerning the comparison of the two teaching methods, it was done by means of comparing the pre-test and post-test achievement scores by using the t-test.

It was found that the developed textbook was accepted with regard to the quality and efficiency. Concerning the comparison of the two teaching methods, it was found that the achievement scores of the students taught by teaching with the textbook were higher than teaching by the general method at the significance level of .01
