The purpose of this study was to develop a "Computer Assisted Instruction: Drug Administration of special Dosage forms" model, as well as to determine the experimental group attitude toward this program. FrontPage version 98 was used for the development of the computer Assisted Instruction program. This program can be valuable not only for drug counseling, but also for pharmacy education. Subjects' attitude toward the computer program was evaluated using a separated questionnaire immediately after using the computer program. The result showed that the positive opinion toward the developed computer program was presented.
