The thesis attempts to analyze the role and manipulation of the military in order to have influence on the decision making of the parliament in the case of the Political Party Act B.E.2524.

The study reaches the conclusion that the change of the political system, from that of the bureaucratic polity to the bureaucratic democracy, has strengthened the power of the extra-bureaucratic group, making the formal control or hegemony of the bureaucratic power difficult to occur again. So the bureaucratic group has to use the condition of national security to persuade the extra-bureaucratic power to accept their policy and the use of the apparatus of the parliamentary system. The pushing forward of the Political Party Act B.E.2524 reflects an effort of the military to make the Political Party Act respond to the national security by allowing only large, strong, institutionalized and disciplined party according to prescription laid down in the 1978 Constitution.
