

Abstract

The thesis, 'How to Improve Coordination of Right and Liberties Protection Volunteers: A Case Study Specified in Angthong Province', mainly focused on the feature of coordination and problem, the viewpoint toward the coordination-development policy, and the suggestion to improve and to better the coordination policy. The data has been collected from 222 volunteers in Angthong Province and 3 exclusive administrators in Right and Liberties Protection Department, via questionnaire and indepth interview. After that, the statistic values, namely, means, percentage, also t-test and F-test values has been used for analysis.

The majorities of sampling group are male, aged between 41-50 years old, and married. The educational background is in primary school level at most. The samplings mostly work as farmer or agriculturist, never take part in any social status, and have income rate between 5,001-10,000 Baht. As a Right and Liberties Protection Volunteer, most of the samplings perform their duty on communication service. The problem found along the coordination, such as, the atmosphere in work hours is evaluated in middle level. On the coordination-development policy issue, it is found that the volunteers agree with the policy in highest level. Based on a comparison between the variety of general information of sampling group and the feature of coordination and problems, it can be implied that general background such as sex, age, educational background, marital status, income, occupation, and social status are varyingly different from level of coordination and problem features in significances at level 0.05. Besides, based on a comparison between the variety of general information of sampling group and the development policy, it is found that sex, age, educational background, marital status, income, occupation, and social status are varyingly different from opinion on coordination-development policy in significances at level 0.05.

In summation, it is suggested that the coordination will be more increasingly effective, if these following issues have been improved. That is to say, the Ministry and the Department should have a clear-cut policy to indicate the role of volunteer in coordination plan. Associated organizations should continuously arrange the conference, seminar, and training course for participants at any level, especially for the administrators. For this reason, they can deal with some of project budgets easily. The honor and willing support for coordinator in any level is requested as well.