

Wannapa Phetecharapan : The study of the relationships between sex role identity of the adolescence and sex role identity of their parents as perceived by themselves.

Thesis Advisor : Associated Professor Prapipan Poomwutisan, 180 pp.

The purpose of this was to study the relationships between sex role identity of the adolescence and sex role identity of their parents as perceived by themselves

The results of this study were as follows :

1. Sex-role identity of an androgynous and masculine boys were more significantly similar to their father' s than to their mother' s ones. ($p < 0.001$)
2. If the father' s and the mother' s sex role identities were classified as masculine and feminine respectively, then sex-role identities of the girl were feminine which were not differ significantly from androgynous, masculine and undifferntiated groups.
3. If both parents were androgynous then the children were significantly more androgynous than the other sex-role identity groups. ($p < 0.001$)