

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This research could not have been completed without generous support from many people. Foremost, I would like to sincerely thank Associate Professor Sucharat Rimkeeratikul, my advisor, for her valuable time and supervision in guiding me through the whole process of this paper.

I would like to express my sincere appreciation to all of the instructors at the Language Institution, Thammasat University for their dedication of time, knowledge and effort. Also, I would like to say thank you to the administrative staff of the program for their support and instruction. Special thanks to my classmates and all my friends, in and outside the program, who always stood shoulder to shoulder with me and brought memorable and joyful times when we were together.

I have to say special thanks to my close friend for effective comments on this study and who made everyday meaningful. Lastly, I would like to express my overwhelming gratitude to my family who always had faith in me and encouraged me to overcome any obstacles in my life. Without you, I could not be myself today.

I would like to apologize for any unintentional errors I might have committed. However, I do hope that the results of the study will benefit those interested in this issue.

Thammasat University
Bangkok, Thailand

Chutipa Baiyai
March 2008