This dissertation owes a debt of gratitude to Associate Professor Dr. James E. Nelson, Emeritus Professor, University of Colorado at Boulder, for his unrelenting supervision, his research expertise, and his friendliness all through my Ph.D. years at Thammasat University. I deeply appreciate his decision to accept me as one of the students under his direct supervision. I am particularly thankful for his kind support during my visit to Boulder, Colorado. Without his academic and personal advice, along with his continued encouragement, I would never have finished my dissertation.

I am greatly indebted to Professor Dr. Tasman Smith, ex-Chairman of the Doctoral Program in Marketing, Thammasat Business School, Thammasat University, who stimulated my interest in the topic, suggested many possible approaches during the research project's infancy, helped to facilitate and speed up data collection process. Most importantly, I am deeply indebted to his persistent encouragement and support throughout many difficult times.

I am thankful to the Royal Golden Jubilee Ph.D. Program, Thailand Research Fund, for its grant for the scholarship, which enabled me to survive financially throughout the Ph.D. years both at home and abroad. I would like to personally thank Associate Professor Dr. Kosan Kusamran, the Royal Golden Jubilee Ph.D. Program's Deputy Director, for his encouragement and invaluable advice. Again, I would like to thank Professor Dr. Tasman Smith for accepting me as one of his scholarship recipients.

My special appreciation goes to Professor Dr. Robert T. Green, Faculty of Commerce and Accountancy, Thammasat University; Assistant Professor Dr. Krittinee Nuttavuthisit, Sasin Graduate Institute of Business Administration, Chulalongkorn University; and Dr. Sunchai Anuman Rajadhon, Managing Director, ACNielsen (Thailand) for serving as examiners and for their comments on the final draft of this dissertation.

I would like to thank Associate Professor Dr. Ruth Banomyong, Director of the Doctoral Program in Marketing, Thammasat Business School, Thammasat University, for his advice on the process leading to my final oral defense.

I cannot end my acknowledgements without expressing my appreciation to many people involved in the research project: 'A' and Ed for their discussions of concepts and ideas during the project's infancy; Nui and Toy for their assistance in data collection; and Huckie for his back translation of the questionnaire. Also, I would like to thank all colleagues, both graduated and currently active, who have shared discussions, joy, and sufferings during one of the most crucial times in life at the Ph.D. office.

I would like to thank Cody K. Nelson, Ian J. Nelson, P'Ple (Dr. Arunee Tanvisuth), Nok, and Mee for their warm kindness and hospitality during my stay at Boulder, Colorado.

An extra note of thanks goes to Namfon, who has always been patient and understanding and has been taking care of my health all along. Finally, I would like to thank Dad and Mom for encouraging me throughout these lengthy years.
