

ABSTRACT

Thesis title : Development of the Good Governance Components and Indicators for the Management of Forest Resources of the Northern Local Government

Author : Mrs. Pimonpan Meepoen

Degree : Doctor of Philosophy (Environmental Education)

Thesis advisor and committee:

Assistant Professor Dr. Chedsada Mingchai Chairperson

Dr. Nicharee Jaikhamwang Committee

The purpose of the study was to investigate the context, factors, condition and the process of forest resource management under the good governance, develop and evaluate factors, indicators of good governance for forest resources of local administrative organization in the Northern region. The target group and key informants consist of 1. Group-depth interviews are administrators who success of manage forest resources, forest watershed and well informed person. 2. The participants of development factors and good governance indicators for manage forest resources of local administrative organization are policy regulators, administrators and officers of the local administrative organizations total 71 persons selected by purposive sampling, community leaders and people in the area total 1,490 persons selected by systematic sampling random 3. The assessor group of development factors and good governance indicators for manage forest resources of local administrative organization are academic experts from University, administrators who awarded the administration of good governancetotal 5 persons selected by purposive sampling. Total of target group and key informants were 1,590 persons. The data was collected by in-dept interviews, observation, field recording, questionnaire and evaluation form of development factors and good governance indicators. Data were analyzed using frequency, percentage, median, Standard Deviation, Principal Component Analysis (PCA) and Multicollinearity in regression.

The results showed that The major of context, factors and conditions of forest resource management were ability, forcefully and manage forest resource by participation among the local administrative organizations , community leaders , academics , religious institutions and people in the area. The instruments used were district development plans, village and district regulations, knowledge management for developments and applied intelligence of locality for preservation of forest resources. The process of forest resource management in area focused participation in committee members from sectors in area , public relations and cooperation provide for agreement and support staff, funds, academics and materials. The results of analyses of The development factors and indicators of good governance for forest resources of local administrative organization in the Northern region showed that 6 factors and 31 indicators: Mechanism and process of forest resource management consisted of 3 factors were channels of hearing opinions, social measures, and change leaders total 18 indicators, Process of forest resource management consisted 3 factors community plan formation, communication and learning innovation total 13 indicators. And The evaluation factors and indicators for forest resources of local administrative organization by expertise showed that The factors and indicators regarding mechanism of forest resource management and The factors and indicators regarding process of forest resource management were highest average score both of benefit , appropriate and possibility.

Keywords : Factors and indicators on good governance, Forest resource management,
Local administrative organization