During my work, I have benefited from the guidance of many colleagues. My greatest debt are to my two supervisors Assoc. Prof. Ruth Banomyong and Prof. Ari Kokko. I have been fortunate to gain advice from two outstanding supervisors and experts in their respective fields of research. Their constant support, advice and encouragement have not only contributed to the final product but more importantly to the development of my interest towards empirical research in challenging environments. I am grateful to Prof. Magnus Blomström as his pedagogical skills and special talent for empirical analysis provided me with crucial support and supervision during the final phase of the dissertation. My colleague and fellow doctoral candidate at the European Institute of Japanese Studies, Anders Engvall, with whom I share long academic and personal interests in Southeast Asia, has during the long journey been an important discussion partner.

For interviews and for providing information, I am grateful to the Swedish Embassy in Vientiane, The National Transport Committee at the Lao Ministry of Public Works and Transport and the Department of Export and Import at the Lao Ministry of Industry and Commerce.

I am very appreciative of the support that I received from Assoc. Prof. Fredric William Swierczek, Director of the Doctoral Program in Business, Thammasat University. I am also grateful for the support given by Prof. Tasman Smith, former Director of the Doctoral Program in Marketing, Thammasat University.

The work on this dissertation has been facilitated by the financial support from several foundations to which I am grateful. The European Institute of Japanese Studies at Stockholm School of Economics have shown full support and provided me with an excellent academic environment. I am grateful for the support given by Prof. Marie Söderberg, Director of the European Institute of Japanese Studies and Nanhee Lee Program Manager at the European Institute of Japanese Studies. This research would not have been conducted without five years of generous financial support provided by Tekn. dr Marcus Wallenbergs Stiftelse för utbildning i internationellt industriellt företagande. Financial support from Sparbanksstiftelsen Färs & Frosta given during the early phase of the present research was crucial factor in order to develop a research proposal.

Different colleagues outside my academic departments have also contributed to this dissertation. My friend and colleague Alexander Roehrl provided me with valuable data and acted as my discussion partner during my years in Bangkok. Prof. Manabu Fujimura hosted me in at Aoyama Gaukin University in Tokyo, where I was invited as research fellow. Christopher Edmonds acted as my supervisor during my stay at the Asian Development Bank in Manila.

My special appreciation goes to my friend Andreas Lundin for his willingness to share his knowledge and help me in any matters.

Finally, it goes without saying that I am alone responsible for remaining errors.
