

Abstract

This research has a purpose to determine the level of political alienation of people in Bangkok and want to know the results of the predictive relationships and a sense of Political alienation towards political participation.

This research takes the concept of Finifer 1970 by a concept in political science. The concept is the application of the concept in social psychology. The concept is adapted from social psychological concepts of alienation of Seeman. Finifer classified by elements of political alienation into four elements is powerlessness, meaninglessness, normlessness and isolate. The test sample population aged 18 years and over. Residents in Bangkok, which is derived from the multi-stage sampling.

The size of the sample from a population-based sample of a sizing Yamane at 95% confidence level with a population of 5 million or more. The samples must be at least 400 people, however, researchers have determined the sample size in this study of 520 people and get back A complete data set of 441 percent, 84.04% of all queries are dealt findings are as follows...

1. People in Bangkok There is a feeling that with a consistent whole. 3 At the time of data collection including the first political rally during the second period after the elections July 3, 2554 and three times the Yingluck Shinawatra administration that they have a sense of political alienation is a sense of political powerlessness to 46.7 percent, 46.3 percent and 50.8 percent respectively.

2. The level of alienation in the political overview of four in all 3 periods of storage.

3. Political alienation of people in Bangkok as well as affect the participation of political parties. That is the political alienation of people in Bangkok, the sense of political powerlessness, feelings of political isolation. Finally, a meaningless political differences affect the political participation practices (conventional). And that does not follow the tradition (unconventional), except that without political normlessness. That only effect on behavior participation political tradition. (Conventional)

4. The influence of the political alienation of the people in Bangkok would affect the participation of political difference. That is the feeling of isolation, the political parties will contribute to a person involved in politics. But as part of political legitimacy. (Conventional) but of meaningless political. And Political powerlessness. Would result in a person not involved in politics at all.

5. The level of alienation, political behavior and political participation of the people in Bangkok Data collected during the first collection period July - August 2552. During a political rally The government of Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva to information collected after the events of the past five years. Information was collected during the month June-July 2557 is in the same level. But the habit of engaging in politics. The back is different.