Abstract

The World War II monuments in Kanchanaburi have been one of those places with significant historical value for both local and worldwide. However with a stress only for places of tourist visits, their importance in term of historical value have been neglected. Destruction both by nature and by man cause damages to the places result in lost of historical traces. Lack of public information makes the situation even worse.

The study a qualitative research, has its objective on consequences cause by neglegent of these historical monumens and also provides methode to utilize the places as for historical studies. Method of study include literature review and field visits with local interviews.

From the study, it shows that these historical monuments can be effectively utilized for historical study purposes by relocate these places as a group along with information. A war museum can be set up to serve this purpose.
