

The groundwater exploration equipment uses the principle of ground resistivity survey at various depths. The equipment consists of electrical equipment flowing electricity into the ground using rather high voltage. The resulting voltage drop produced by this current in the earth is measured and calculated. Testing of this equipment showed promising results.