

Editorial

Welcome to the third issue of New Voices in Translation Studies. The change in the way we manage the publication of this journal, which we introduced in the last issue, has been received well. So we will continue adding papers to the open issue as soon as they are ready for publication.

Three years have passed since the inauguration of New Voices at the first conference of IATIS in Seoul in 2004. We would like to take this opportunity to thank the members on the editorial board and the advisory panel for their work and support. We would also like to thank the CTTS and IATIS for their support and funding. Last, but most certainly not least, we would like to thank Gabriela Saldanha, co-founder of New Voices, for her work as an editor for the past three years. She will step down as editor and remain affiliated with New Voices as a member of the editorial board.

There have been some changes on the advisory panel too — this is mostly due to our aim of involving a balance of new and established researchers. We hope that the members that have left the panel will keep in touch. We welcome the new members on the advisory panel and are looking forward to working with them.

Due to the steady stream of article submissions, we have decided to continue our editing team of three. We are delighted to announce that Dr Stefan Baumgarten, from Aston University in Birmingham, has joined us as an editor.

The Third Postgraduate Conference in Translation Studies will take place in November of this year at the University of Edinburgh. We are pleased to see that the first DCU Postgraduate Conference in Translation Studies has developed into a conference series. We hope that this series will continue and perhaps even spread across the whole of the UK and Ireland. We are looking forward to publishing papers from the conference later in this or the subsequent issue.

We wish you happy reading!

Marion Winters and Charlotte Bosseaux, September 2007

Amendment

Since the launch of the current issue of New Voices in Translation Studies there has been a change in the editorial team. Unfortunately, Dr Charlotte Bosseaux was unable to continue as editor. However, she will continue working with New Voices as a member of the advisory panel. Dr Sameh Hanna from University of Salford in Manchester joined in her stead. We would like to thank Charlotte for her work and Sameh for his availability to step in on such short notice, and herewith acknowledge Sameh as co-editor of the current issue.

Marion Winters and Stefan Baumgarten, June 2008